THE CAMP CARSON NATION

We love the international aspect of Camp Carson. It's a big world out there and these days, more than ever, we are all interconnected. This summer there will be 8 countries represented on staff: England, Scotland, Brazil, Columbia, Germany, France, Paraguay and the United States. The Dining Hall reflects this diversity with all the flags displayed to recognize all the international staff who have joined us over the last 20 years or so.

We intentionally bring in this global staff team to help our campers realize they are part of a bigger world. For a large portion of our campers, these international counselors will be the only person they have ever met from another country. It is very rewarding to see the campers' interest in other cultures and to hear the interesting questions they ask. Our favorite camper quote is "Did you know in Africa they go to the zoo to see a giraffe?" This camper assumed that if you lived in Africa, you just step out the back door and see giraffes walk by. While this was a harmless assumption, many times our assumptions about other countries are not.

We have asked two of our former international staff to share their Camp Carson experiences. It is heartwarming to see the common thread of acceptance and lifetime friendships; something all of us who belong to the Camp Carson Nation understand!

It was the summer of 1973 when I came to Camp Carson. The fact that I am still connected to Camp Carson already proves that once connected it lasts a lifetime. I visited Princeton again in 2012 together with Steve Fritz and Skip Loge and immediately I felt the positive atmosphere in Camp Carson again.

I was pleased to see the old cabins as they were when I last saw them, although I know that by now they have been replaced. Nostalgia only lasts so many years. My first time at Camp Carson was an overwhelming experience for me. I was 20 years old, just finished my training to be a teacher. Traveling from the Netherlands to the US was unusual for most people in those days. It was an adventure. I remember I felt small traveling many hours on the bus from New York

I can't describe the magic that camp has sometimes. As a counselor I spent my summer playing games, singing songs and dancing with the kids something I never thought I would be doing, let alone missing. I was so nervous going into my counselor training week at camp. I was in a foreign country surrounded by strangers with no clue how to look after children. However, I still remember one of the first things they said at camp and that was to remember why we were here, For the Kids. We spent the entire week talking about A.C.E and how to make the kids feel accepted challenged and empowered. It is something we strive for every week and at the end of every week at camp we shared those moments with each other. Our job as counselors is to help the kids to thrive and we did that using A.C.E something we always had in the back of our minds throughout summer.

to a tiny bus stop in Princeton, waiting for Steve Fritz to pick me up.

I had a fantastic time at Camp Carson. After a couple of days of adjusting, getting over my uneasiness of speaking English, I felt accepted by the counselors. The open mentality, friendliness, comradeship, everything helped me to feel comfortable.

Working with the children was wonderful. Being a teacher the work was not too difficult, but what I found so inspiring that we managed to teach children how to swim in one week, how to overcome fear in climbing the big tree, daring to ride the donkeys Sears and Robuck. All wonderful experiences that gave the children confidence in themselves and in each other. A fantastic experience for all of us.

It was great when I came back in 2012 and I felt the same vibe was still there, after 40 years. The commitment of the counselors, the children. Very optimistic in every sense of the word. I think Camp Carson is a fantastic place for children to spend the summer. I find it special to see the international perspective with which you work. All those flags in the mess hall are a symbol of this. It is very important that children learn that all over the world children and adults are more the same than that they are different. We have skills, expectations, fears and aspirations that we share. At Camp Carson you can learn this from each other. An experience that will last a lifetime.

Two years ago my brother Andre was cycling in the US and was passing by Princeton. I told him all about Camp Carson, of course, and he paid a visit. He was as impressed as I am about the positive atmosphere.

I intend to visit Camp Carson again sometime in the future, because there was one thing I missed in the mess hall. That's the Dutch flag. I will bring one with me and hope to put it with all the others.

One thing I am absolutely sure of is that I would not be able to do this job without the fantastic team at Camp Carson. Those strangers that I met on that first day were my friends by the second. The support and friendship that everyone at camp offers keeps me going throughout the summer and it's something I can't wait to come back to. They always told us that part of the camp magic was being able to make these friendships. I feel closer to some of my camp friends than I do with people I've known my whole life. Sharing these moments and weeks with the other counselors makes you a better team and better friends. I can't wait to see everyone again. They've become a second family to me.

I didn't think camp would affect me when I went and it's something I am thankful for. To anyone who is thinking about working at a summer camp (or has children who are) but is worried an internship would be more beneficial, you can forget about that. That was my initial thought but I underestimated the skills and experience I could gain from working as a counselor. It gave me the confidence to walk into a room and feel that I could be friends with everyone in there. Personally, I gained so many soft skills from my time with the kids. Camp is the main thing I talk about in any interview I do because I can show them my best self and what I can do when I love where I am. On another level, camp provided me with the opportunity to forget about university and just be myself again which is something I would struggle to put a value on.

Every week we see these kids grow in confidence and abilities by being around camp and it happens in different ways for each of the kids. Some of them start off quiet and at the end of the week will be the most talkative person I have ever met, others just like to tell me what they've accomplished in their week. It is always a great part of my job talking with the kids about what they have and want to do that week or later in life. I try my best to be the best role model for these kids and help them grow. I love seeing these kids try, more than anything else that is all I can ask from them. Even sometimes if they don't reach their goal I can always see them grow on the inside. Something inside them seems to register - I tried my best and that's what I need to do next time. We do our best to help them recognize that no matter what they've done, there is always something to be proud of.

Camp Mom shares what Camp has done for her children.

"They have developed strong interpersonal skills such as communicating, empathy, understanding as well as motivating others. They also know how to take challenges that are hard and persevere through them when they are ready. The camp has been a pivotal, life changing experience for my kids. (I can hardly get them to come home!)"

Share your love for the life change that happens at camp by giving to the Annual Fund today!

An alum favorite are the suspension bridges that were here at camp for several decades until the 1990's when they had to be taken down. As part of the Continuing the Legacy Campaign, two suspension bridges will be part of camp again.

1940's Bridge at the Camp entrance. The trees were a bit smaller then!

One of the new bridges will go here, in the same location as the 1940's bridge, from the bank by the zip line tower across to the path which leads to the Tom Sawyer Swing and opening campfire.

THANK YOU!

Our thanks to camp alum, Spencer Goodson and his wife, Mary, for sponsoring the camp entrance suspension bridge.

Spencer spent many summers at camp as a camper and staff member and is thrilled to bring back this camp icon.

This suspension bridge rendering will span the gully between the Ridge Top cabins and the main part of camp.

This bridge has not yet been sponsored.

Black socks they never get dirty,
The longer you wear them the blacker they get,
Sometimes I think I should wash them,
But something inside me keeps saying not yet,
Not yet, not yet.
